Comments by the authors: I learned a lot from discussing AD management with Nordic experts who obviously had different experiences and approaches. The article defines typical Nordic AD phenotypes that clinicians will recognize, but the management of these was fairly similar. We are at the brink of more personalized medicine, also in AD, and with the new medications in the horizon, we will soon know more about treatment of AD phenotypes. In the meantime, it is my experience that AD patients still benefit from a tailored approach, in particular regarding disease and treatment information. Read more

Acta Dermato-Venereologica – 100 years

The celebration comprise a symposium and a series of theme issues called entitled "Frontiers in Dermatology and Venereology"

In 1920, Acta Dermato-Venereologica (ActaDV) was founded in Stockholm by the Chairman of Dermatology and Syphilidology at Karolinska Institutet, Professor Johan Almkvist. To begin with, it was a minor tri-lingual journal (German, French, English) with contributions mainly from Europe. Today, 100 years and 6 editors later, the journal is an online, open access and peer-reviewed publication, own by a non-profit society and produced entirely in-house without any dependency on a commercial publisher. For an historic review see *Vahlquist A. ActaDV 100 years – An incomplete history*¹. Annually, ActaDV releases 250–300 papers submitted from all around the world. The acceptance rate is around 50% and the impact factor 3.4–4.2 in recent years, i.e. among top 10 in the field.

As part of the celebration of the journal's 100 years birthday, ActaDV will organize a symposium "Frontiers in Dermatology and Venereology" with invited speakers from Europe and the USA (see full program below), and publish a series of connected theme issues with contributions from the speakers and other invited key-opinion-leaders around the world (see below). It is hoped that these undertakings will help to spur the scientific interest in Dermatology and Venereology.

On behalf of the editorial board and as principal organizer of the centenary celebrations, I wish to sincerely thank all the authors who kindly accepted to contribute to the theme issues, the specially appointed theme editors, and the skilful work of the editorial office without which nothing of this had been possible.
