Comments by the authors:

The steeply rising incidence of skin cancer triggered us to investigate the overall costs of skin cancer management in the Netherlands. We feel the results of this manuscript are important because it demonstrates that due to the high volume and introduction of systemic drugs, skin cancer is the fourth most costly cancer in the Netherlands. While future projections show an even alarming increase.

Our study therefore warrants optimising the efficient use of resources for sustainable healthcare. Read more

Acta Dermato-Venereologica – 100 years

The celebration comprise a symposium and a series of theme issues called entitled "Frontiers in Dermatology and Venereology"

In 1920, Acta Dermato-Venereologica (ActaDV) was founded in Stockholm by the Chairman of Dermatology and Syphilidology at Karolinska Institutet, Professor Johan Almkvist. To begin with, it was a minor tri-lingual journal (German, French, English) with contributions mainly from Europe. Today, 100 years and 6 editors later, the journal is an online, open access and peer-reviewed publication, own by a non-profit society and produced entirely in-house without any dependency on a commercial publisher. For an historic review see *Vahlquist A. ActaDV 100 years – An incomplete history*¹. Annually, ActaDV releases 250–300 papers submitted from all around the world. The acceptance rate is around 50% and the impact factor 3.4–4.2 in recent years, i.e. among top 10 in the field.

As part of the celebration of the journal's 100 years birthday, ActaDV will organize a symposium "Frontiers in Dermatology and Venereology" with invited speakers from Europe and the USA (see full program below), and publish a series of connected theme issues with contributions from the speakers and other invited key-opinion-leaders around the world (see below). It is hoped that these undertakings will help to spur the scientific interest in Dermatology and Venereology.

On behalf of the editorial board and as principal organizer of the centenary celebrations, I wish to sincerely thank all the authors who kindly accepted to contribute to the theme issues, the specially appointed theme editors, and the skilful work of the editorial office without which nothing of this had been possible.

The symposium is cancelled due to covid-19!

We are sorry to inform you that the symposium in May 2020 has now been cancelled. Needless-to-say we were all very much looking forward to listening to all interesting lectures at the symposium and regret the inconveniences that the cancellation has/will cause you. We have considered the possibilities of postponing the meeting or performing it online but have reached the conclusion that neither option is feasible.

We are happy though that all lecturers in this planned symposium have written a review article which are currently being released in the centenary issues of ActaDV. Once they are all published, they will be presented in a printed book that can be ordered. Click on the links below for the already released theme issues and see the titles of each article in the theme and read them online.
